The future of Tottenham Hotspur is uncertain, as the club is facing a fight for survival in the Premier League. While the failure to qualify for the Champions League might affect the club financially, fans are worried about their future in the transfer market. The situation is far from ideal as the club is struggling to gain a balance in the transfer market. In this season's, the Tottenham Hotspur has been unsuccessful in their recent attempts to buy players for their squad. The club also has just two midfielders in their squad. It's no surprise that things have been going down hill for the Tottenham Hotspur as their finances are low. The team has been losing more and more money from their transfer operations and are currently in debt. They have an annual operating budget of around GBP 35Million, which is a far cry from the reported GBP 430Million that the club earned last year. The future of Tottenham Hotspur might be in the hands of Daniel Levy, who is currently the chairman of the club. Levy is known to be a patient man, but if he feels that the club can afford to spend more money in the market, he might look into the transfer market to buy a few new faces for the club. 2d92ce491b
